

Late-night raid on Budgens

ETON: Budgens in Eton High Street was taped off by police following a night-time break-in.

At about 10.40pm on Thursday, January 12, raiders forced entry into the supermarket and tried to open the tills and cash machine.

Police did not respond to multiple requests from the Express to clarify what, if anything, was stolen.

The supermarket was unoccupied at the time of the break-in.

The store was closed for a short time the following day as officers carried out their investigations.

Police are appealing for anyone with any information to call 101.

EMPLOYERS handed out top tips to the next generation of workers during an exhibition at Windsor Racecourse.

Slough-based employment skills charity Learning to Work organised the event with its partners across Berkshire to help

1 SPEED READ: More than 1,200 students attended an exhibition at Windsor Racecourse on Wednesday to consider career opportunities. Slough-based employment charity Learning to Work organised the event.

give young people a flavour of what awaits them in the working world.

Students from Herschel Grammar School, Upton Court Grammar School and Langley Academy were among more than 1,200 people who flooded through the doors. Businesses and organisations including Thames Water, Aldi and the British Army spoke to students about their latest apprenticeships and job opportunities. A host of interactive challenges were also on offer.

Linda Moody, project executive for Learning to Work, said: "Apprenticeships are very important so one of the main criteria for companies attending this event was that they had apprenticeships available for students to sign up to. "I think the students got a lot out of the event."
